The question of the section of the British de GERMANY Mesars. Mahlau & Waldeschmidt, in guarding the approaches to the Yangteze, has not been quite clearly understood, says the Londen and China Express. At the commencement of the war the Japanese Government gave the British Government an undertaking not to e irv the war to Shanghai or the approaches to the Yangt ze. Since then there has been a good deal of correspondence on the question, and though the Japanese would have liked to resoind the agreement it has been sufficient to remind them of their promise, and not to proceed to any other measures.

Regarding the question of increasing the Navy the Chancellor of the Exchequer declared that Government was resolved levally to continue carrying out the naval programme. He denied that the question of Home. Rule had been shelved. That measure was still the main object of the Liberal party. Mr. Balfour, after paying a warm tribute to the memory of Lord Randelph Churchill, dwelt upon the absence of any reference to the Navy in the Queru's speech and characterized the Government programme as a farce. He said that Lord Rosebery declined to introduce any resolution dealing with the House of Lords at the opening of the session because the dissolution of Parliament must immediately follow an
